General 'Boy' - The Life of Sir Frederick Browning, Richard Mead. General 'Boy' Browning is best known as the commander of Britain's airborne forces for much of the Second World War, and as the senior commander most directly involved in Operation Market Garden, the famous 'bridge too far'. As this biography makes clear he was a rather unusual figure for a senior army officer, and in particular for a Guardsman.

He won a DSO in WW1 but was off sick quite a lot. In fact his whole life was littered with time off for nervous illness. His exterior was unflappable and competent, but he was prone to depression and drunk and smoked to excess. He was nonetheless an excellent soldier, and by the time WW2 came had been promoted so much he soon became a General.
